Appalachian Antique Hardwoods Recognized by The Ultimate Green List

Waynesville, NC (September 15, 2009) – Appalachian Antique Hardwoods announced that they have been recognized by The Ultimate Green List as a premier manufacturer of sustainable products and services. The Ultimate Green List focuses on finding business and organizations that are working to conserve natural resources for future generations to enjoy. Offering the most comprehensive list of green businesses and organizations on the web, The Ultimate Green List proactively maintains the most up to date list of green sustainable companies. “Being recognized as a green sustainable business reinforces Appalachian Antique Hardwoods’ goal of providing the best in class reclaimed and recycled wood products”, Zac Guy, Founder and President of Appalachian Antique Hardwoods.

Appalachian Antique Hardwoods has been a pioneer in identifying and developing building techniques that incorporate green-centered building principles and applications. Offering over three thousand reclaimed and recycled products to architects, builders, interior designers and homeowners, Appalachian’s experienced staff of Certified Green Professionals™ have successfully designed and completed over 3,500 reclaimed wood projects. Each Appalachian Antique Hardwoods’ product contributes valuable points toward Leadership in Environmental and Energy Design (L.E.E.D.), NAHB Green Built, and Healthy Built certifications. “Our goal is to become the premier leader in the use of antique wood building materials”, says Zac Guy. “By educating the benefits of green building techniques and demonstrating our desire to become environmental stewards, Appalachian Antique Hardwoods can truly impact our living environment for generations to come”, says Guy.
